

A Book Review

Gifts for the Soul

by Dawn E. Clark

Review by Terrie Sims

Dr. Clark has some astounding stories to tell. I am tempted to relay one in particular regarding reincarnation. But I don't have room to do it justice in this forum. I will say that my husband and I read that section several times. The way the book flows is very valuable. An essential foundation is put in place via her experiences so the reader will be ready for the ultimate gift and message...the healing tools.

These dynamic visual tools hold deep meaning within them and actually elicit energetic responses. They facilitate the empowerment to heal deep core life issues, release energetic blockages, boost the immune system, and heal underlying causes of physical illness. Dr. Clark believes healing is available to all of us without exception and these sacred instruments awaken our inherent ability to heal ourselves. On July 7th she was invited to appear on The Debra Duncan Show to discuss healing techniques found in her book in an effort to help a young girl in desperate need of emotional healing. She has worked with the family and progress has already been made.

It has been my personal experience that the road to healing requires much pain and suffering before reaching the goal of well being. That may have been true in the past, but there is new ancient knowledge revealed that has the potential to change the healing process, as we know it. That is a pretty bold statement, but after reading the book and embracing the exercises, some definite shifts occurred in my life. Was it painful? No. I am still working with the tools. It is a process, yet it is not "work" at all. This healing system is simple and seems to get to the root quickly.

Recently, I discussed Gifts for the Soul with other readers. Everyone had a different experience, but all were touched. I was intrigued by all the positive feedback. There are some books you read and put away. This isn't one of them. ♣

Dr. Dawn Clark will be conducting workshops in Houston on [redacted] and [redacted]. For information on upcoming events or to schedule a consultation, please contact [redacted] at [redacted].